Dancing Soldiers

Somebody suggested it would be a nice idea if the girls invited the recruits to a dance — with, of course, some refreshments. So they got together, and the Colonel and his wife helped them with the arrangements. After the second dance, the girls realized what they were up against. Here are bits of the conversation.

"Dancing is in my blood. I know it. When I get out of the army, I am going to be a professional dancer." "If dancing is in your blood, let me make a simple suggestion. You need improved circulation so that the dancing blood gets down to your feet."

"There's nothing like dancing lessons to help you keep up with the latest steps." "Good idea. But why not apply it to yourself? Go take some lessons at the dance studio in town."

"I am very light on my feet, almost as if I were dancing in the air." "You may be light on your feet, but you feel like a ton of bricks on my feet."

"I do know the latest steps. But somehow they aren't playing the music for them." "Well your latest steps were the latest back in the twenties. You aren't late. You are just out of date."

"I am very sorry that you fell. It was my fault. I don't know what went wrong?" "So long as I didn't fall off a cliff, I figure I can forgive you."

"That dance music does something to me. What does it do to you?" "Just makes me wish it would end right now."

Anyway, they all enjoyed the refreshments; and perhaps that was the best part of the dance.

The Talking Machine

In the army, you can take certain special correspondence courses. This young soldier had had only one year of high school, which he really didn't finish as he failed every course. But now, he was ambitious; and his Sergeant encouraged him to study.

"If you want to get ahead, you have to study," he said. "Any time you have a problem, come to me. I'll be honest with you. If I don't know the answer, I'll ask the Lieutenant for it."

So one day, the young soldier came to the Sergeant for help.

"Look at question number ten," he said. "Did Edison invent the first talking machine? Or was it somebody else?"

"It looks easy to answer," said the Sergeant. "I do know that Edison gets credit for inventing the electric bulb, and he had a lot to do with what we called the phonograph. But was he the first one? I'll ask the Lieutenant about it."

So he went to the officer and asked him the question. He explained it was for the young soldier who was taking study courses via the mail.

"Offhand, I would say Edison was the first one to invent the talking machine or whatever you want to call it," said the officer. "But let me ask the Captain. He knows everything."

So the Sergeant went with the Lieutenant to the Captain who had the correct answer:

"As far as I am concerned, the first talking machine on this earth was a creation of the Lord from a spare rib of Adam. But give Edison credit. He did invent a talking machine you could turn off any time you got tired of hearing it."

****

Follow Orders.

Sergeant Jim McCullough was the perfect army drill master. He could take any raw recruit and turn him into a first class soldier. He always had a lot of stories to tell the men when he lectured to them in the class room. This is one of his favorite stories:

"In the army you have to follow instructions just as they are given to you. This is fundamental, and never forget it. If we had one set of instructions for fifty soldiers and each decided to interpret it in his own way, there would be chaos. So you follow and do what you are told. Which reminds me about a sentry the first night he was on duty.

"Follow instructions carefully," said his Sergeant. "If you hear a strange noise, you first say: "Halt! Who goes there? Identify yourself, or I will shoot." You repeat this three times. Now let me hear you say it."

That young soldier repected the words carefully. It was about three in the morning when he heard a strange noise.

"Halt! Halt! Halt!" he said in a rather frightened tone of voice. Then he fired his rifle at the object ahead of him. He realized he hadn't given the entire order, so he then said: "Who goes there? Identify yourself, or I will shoot." This he said three times according to instructions.

"Did he kill anyone?" asked one soldier.

"No," replied Sergeant Jim McCullough. "Fortunately, he shot at a tree."

"If you didn't make this one up," said another soldier, "can you tell us the name of that dumbbell."

"The present Sergeant Jim McCullough," roared back the soldier.
